

Why do I need an Interior Designer?

As a designer myself, it's a question I've pondered over many times...with no definitive answer!

I guess a lot depends on needs, abilities and circumstances when considering any home improvements; if you feel able to tackle the task then go for it...!

However, if the thought of seemingly endless hours of planning and preparation, costs and a lack of knowledge leave you feeling a little 'light-headed', then maybe the services of an Interior Designer are just what you need.

A designer can help in three ways...

Time! Saving you some...oh, wouldn't that be lovely!

Who has the time to properly plan the layout and function of a room?...or consider what will go in it?...the colour scheme?...measurements?...shopping?...before you've even picked up a paint brush. Yikes!

A designer can take on the complete project for you, giving you time to get on with things you want to do.

Money! I don't know many people who have an endless supply of cash, and can afford to update their homes on a regular basis. Getting it right first time is important to avoid making unnecessary changes that will blow the budget! A designer will know how to spend wisely to give you the home you desire.

Knowledge! We all have something we're good at...some are blessed with talent from an early age, some study to improve their talents. A good designer will have both these attributes; a natural flair and a sound knowledge of design regulations, rules and aesthetics...and be able to help you decide on a scheme that best suits your style and needs for a safe, organised, comfortable home.
